DaMina Advisors Global Conference Call – NIGERIA

Topic: How Nigeria's military induced postponed general elections, and a new six week military campaign against Boko Haram significantly alters the country's near-term political risk outlook

Background: The 7 February postponement of Nigeria's contentious February 14 2015 general elections by the country's electoral commission, at the strong behest of the country's security authorities, who claim are now poised to launch a major six week military assault against the Islamist insurgency group Boko Haram, threatens to reverse the country's democratic trajectory and possibly catalyze a military-backed civilian dictatorship. With the US and UK publicly weary of moves by the embattled incumbent President Goodluck Jonathan and his security chiefs, to postpone, re-postpone and ultimately cancel the elections, under the pretext of a 'national emergency,' (as Boko Haram is unlikely to be defeated in just six weeks), the country's capital markets, key companies, as well as Jonathan-aligned business oligarchs could see their worlds turned upside-down if tough 'Russia-style' US/EU/UK economic sanctions are imposed in any ensuing chaos.

There will be Q&A opportunity.
