Our Thesis: Despite being Africa's largest economy, Nigeria's socio-economic transformation into a major global 'emerging market' on par with the BRICS countries had been previously stymied by bad, chaotic and often violent political governance; and a stained international reputation for corruption. Thus, the country's successful 28th and 29th March historic, competitive, transparent, free and fair elections; and the 31 March peaceful concession of power by the incumbent president Goodluck Jonathan have tectonically altered the destiny of Nigeria – and with it all of Sub-Saharan Africa. Much like China's Den Xiaoping, who returned back to power in 1979 at the ripe old age of 75 years to catalyze a three decade monumental socio-economic transformation of China; or (France's Charles de Gaulle, who returned to power at 68 years old to end the Algerian civil war); Buhari at 72 years old, using slightly different methods, and hewing from a leftist-statist-pragmatic-nationalist, rather than Xiaoping's or de Gaulle's rightist-liberal-pragmatic-nationalist orientation, is poised to -'completely re-set' - the pace and direction of Nigeria's long awaited socio-economic and political transformation.
